THE RECALLING OF HAMILTON.

Just what significance there is in the recall of Sir Ian Hamilton to London to report remains to be disclosed it may be the first real indication of the determination to abandon that campaign and utilize the forces of the allies on the Gallipoli peninsula for the accomplishment of the same purpose for which they are fighting in an-other way, or it may simply mean a eater progress at that point.

Whatever the result is it is made necessary because of the Teutonic drive through Servia. That imposes difficulties which must be met the prospects of forcing the Darselles will be slimmer than ever. If Secretary Redfield believes that there will be others who will take up the business which has been dropped by the Pacific Mail Steamship comselling its ships and abandon ing its transportation business between this country and Asiatic ports, he is unquestionably right, but if he thinks that it will be done by vessels flying Provisions for taking care of that business have already been made by a Japanese line which has purchased a of new steamers and is prepared to handle a substantial increase in business. This is the manner in which others will take the place of the Pacific Mail.

The likelihood of American capital being put to such use under the seamen's act is blasted by the positive statement by a representative of the company which purchased the Pacific Mail liners to the effect that it would be impossible to compete under this new law which goes into effect next month with the Japanese. This is in full accord with the report which was f Yokohama when he said: "Taking into account the subsidy which the Toyo Kisen Kaisha receives, it costs four than it did the Pacific Mail should make. They form an indispensable branch of the navy, but not until there had been a test of such vessels of that type as the country now possesses and the demonstration that they were not only sadly inferior to the modern underwater craft, but old and dangerous for the crews who manned them, was the proper amount of consideration given to bolstering up the submarine equipment. The present fictilla of submarines on each coast may look well, but they represent little when it comes to preparedness and that rather than to preparedness and that rather than what counts as a naval asset. There are other naval vessels under construction which with the announcement recently made by the administration favoring more first class battleships, battle cruisers and other defense equipment makes it evident that there has been an awakening to the require ments of the country in this respect. It means a large expenditure without any sign of trouble in view, but it is evertheless a timely move in behalf of adequate defense, safety and peace.

Monastir, picked as the latest war capital of Servia, as a stronghold where the enemy is never expected to arrive, forms the subject of the geographical description issued today by the National Geographic Society. The war primer reads as follows:

"Monastir is the last place in Servia, hard upon the Greek frontier, and defended by lesser mountains on every hand. It was one of the most prized acquisitions made by the Servians after the war in 1912 of the Bellian League with the Ottoman Empire. vians after the war in 1912 of the Bel-kan League with the Ottoman Empire. By means of schools, propaganda, Servian committees, and Servian priests, the people of all this southern territory were long carefully prepared for an ultimate union with the lit-tle kingdom. The Servians pursued the same tactics here that the Bul-garians and Greeks pursued for years in their endeavors to win the upper in their endeavors to win the upper hand in the Turkish province of Mec-edonia. Monstir was to the Servian ambitions what the port of Saloniki was to the Greeks and the Bulgarians.

"Monastir was the second city of Turkish Macedonia. It did a thriving business, even under Turkish rule, and business, even under Turkish rule, and the Servians entertain great hopes for its future. Mercover, this mountain city is one of the important strategic points in the Balkans, and, when under Turkish rule, it was made a base of military defense and offense of the same rank as Adrianople. Here was located the headquarters offices of a Turkish army corps; for the roads from the port of Saloniki, on the Aegean Sea; from the port of Durazzo, on the Adriatic Sea; from Nish, the ancient capital of Servia; and from the important fortress Adriatiople, met and crossed here. the Austrian Crown owe a score of gratitude to one another.

"The foundations of the Servian colony in Hungary were laid following the decisive Turkish victory upon the plain of Kossovo on June 15, 1289. Here, the soldiers of Sultan Murar I finally crushed the independence of the Servian tribes, though the Sultan himself was killed upon the field of battle by a Servian knight. The Turks sold the Servians as slaves in the markets of Constantinople, while the Janissaries stationed in their lands made life unbearable for such as remained behind. Therefore, an influx of Servians took place across the northern border.
